Working with the Scriptures (Luke 6:17,20-26)

In Luke's Gospel this passage is called The Sermon on the Plain. In Matthew it's The Sermon on the Mount. Today we might call it The Sermon in the City. The Beatitudes—the same message told from three different points of view.

What does it mean to be satisfied? The answer would probably depend on what it is that you were hungry for. If you lived on the mountain you might hunger for level ground on which to plant and build. If you lived on the plain you might hunger for crisp mountain air and cold, clear trout streams. But for what might you hunger if you lived in the city?

Well, sanitation workers might hunger for safe working conditions. Healthcare workers might hunger for less paperwork. Teachers might hunger for art supplies and computer labs. Airline employees might hunger for increased airport security. Police might hunger for safer neighborhoods. Attorneys might hunger for an equitable criminal justice system. Sellers might hunger for buyers. Buyers might hunger for sellers. Employees might hunger for fair employers. Employers might hunger for honest employees. Different people, different points of view, different hungers - each looking for the assurance that their work has meaning and that what they do matters.

Perhaps it would help if we looked at things from God's point of view. Sanitation workers eliminate the spread of disease; healthcare workers heal the sick. Teachers prepare children to become responsible citizens of the world; airline personnel provide safe transportation in a global community. Police officers keep our communities safe; attorneys defend the rights of their clients. Sellers provide necessary goods and services; buyers provide work for manufacturers. Employees support their families and themselves; employers provide them with the means to do so. Will they weep? Probably. Will people hate them? Perhaps. Will they make tons of money? Not likely. But will they be satisfied? Yes, and their "...reward will be great in heaven". They will rejoice because - whether on the mountain, on the plain, or in the city - they have done good work.

For what do you hunger? What will it take for you to be satisfied?
