Working with the Scriptures (Lk. 9:11b-17)

"Give them some food yourselves." Jesus' response to his disciples sounds almost harsh. After all, they were just trying to help. The only logical thing to do was to tell the people that dinner was "on their own" (many church and business conferences in our own time operate this way). The disciples were just being "practical." But Jesus seemed to have something else in mind...

It was Saturday afternoon and, officially, the office was closed. The big meeting was scheduled for Monday. Susan would be making the first presentation. Representatives were coming in to the home office from around the country. Susan was just putting the finishing touches on her Power Point presentation when it happened - her computer crashed! All of her handouts - her charts and profiles - were gone, just like that. She tried calling her Department Head at home but got only an answering machine: "In case of emergency please call Susan Duffy." A lot of good that would do her - she was Susan Duffy! Who could she call?

A couple of people from her design and development team were also in the office and overheard the message Susan was leaving on her boss's answering machine. They came over to her desk to ask what was wrong. When she told them what had happened they started coming up with ideas of how they could retrieve information, break it down into its component parts and begin to reconstruct the presentation. By the time they were finished (several hours later) Susan had a better presentation than the one she'd been working on alone. Susan's co-workers' gifts of time, energy and skill had saved the day.

Jesus didn't solve the disciples' problem for them. Nor did he let them pass the problem on to the crowds. Instead, He seemed to be telling them, "You have within you all the resources you need - and more." Sometimes that's how God answers our prayers, too. "In case of emergency, call _____." "Give them something to eat yourself." Are we willing to share our time, energy and skill? Or do we, like the disciples, still expect God to work the miracle?

As in years past, Pro-Life Wisconsin affiliates will observe the day with prayer and a community presence outside abortion mills including Planned Parenthood in Appleton, 3800 N. Gillett St. on June 8 at 10:00AM.
